TERRY ROMERO PAUL

Terry Romero Paul's "Baker's Dozen" series is a tantalizing and personal collection of oil paintings. Although the works are whimsical and full of color, their subject matter runs deep. Donuts and their circular motifs symbolize eternity and the face of a clock. Where a bite is taken on the donut represents the hand on a clock and symbolizes the "sweet" passing time. The series was born after Paul survived a life-threatening illness, and with it, an amplified appreciation for each day. She hopes that her work will serve as a constant reminder of how sweet life is.

Paul has worked as an illustrator, background painter, and muralist. She received a BFA from California State University of Northridge and was formally trained in background painting for animation and fine arts at the Associates in Art School, Los Angeles Academy of Figurative Arts, and Chouinard School of Fine Arts.
